MISSOULA--

The University of Montana 1981 summer session will open with a one week pre-session, June 15-19. The two four-week and eight-week sessions are scheduled for June 22 - Aug. 14.

The pre-session will offer courses in chemistry, computer science, foreign languages and literatures, geography, mathematics, social work, health and physical education, home economics, science education and music. Fees for most pre-session courses are $30 per credit for both residents and non-residents.

Throughout the eight weeks of summer session, seminars and workshops of varying duration will cover a wide range of professional interests in the arts and sciences.

Highlights include classes in art, TV scriptwriting and creative writing, which are scheduled concurrently with a Conference on the Creative Person, July 20-31. Special interdisciplinary programs offered only in the summer include the Western Studies Program, featuring courses in anthropology, English, geography, history and Native American Studies, and the Summer Program in Public Administration. The summer Public Administration program is designed to meet the educational needs of persons with public service career goals, current governmental employees and social studies teachers.

To promote greater recognition of the profession of teaching and school administration, the School of Education has chosen the theme of "Professional Education: Purpose and Value" for its 1981 summer programs. A conference for school administrators and all educators will be held June 25 and 26. Three nationally acclaimed speakers highlighting the conference will cover aspects of the summer theme from the viewpoints of curriculum and teaching, administrative theory, and the practical concerns and goals of schools in the 1980s.

The School of Journalism will offer two courses designed for teachers, and the School of Business will offer most core requirements for summer students. A special course scheduled will be Personal Financial Planning and Investment.

Summer session bulletins and information may be obtained by contacting the Summer Programs Office, Main Hall 125, University of Montana, Missoula, MT 59812, 243-2900. The bulletin contains all necessary forms.
